Not illustrated. 1889 Excerpt: .acid crystallizes from an aqueous solution into long, glistening needles, and like salicylic acid turns to a violet color by iron chloride reaction. Prof. Loesch found that daily doses of 6 to 8 grms. of the sodium salt (sodium paracre sotinicum) were readily borne by the human system, as well as by large dogs. A part of the acid passed through the system unchanged, and its presence in the urine was promptly shown by the violet color test with iron chloride. The urine of a dog after the administration of paracresotinic acid, or its sodium salt, was evaporated by heat, the cooled residue acidulated with muriatic acid, and agitated with ether, resulting in a combination of paracreosotinic acid with the ether. By redistilling the ether the residue appeared in fused crystals: and by recrystallization of this residue pure paracresotinic acid was obtained. The product was identified by elementary analysis and by determination of melting point Sodium paracresotinicum is a fine crystalline powder, of pronounced bitter but not nauseous taste. It dissolves in 24 parts of warm water, not separating after cooling. The investigators administered 3 to 4 grm. doses to themselves, and experienced no noteworthy ill-effects. Excepting that profuse perspiration ensued, the digestive functions and temperature of the body continued perfectly normal. Twenty minutes after taking the remedy the iron chloride reaction was obtained in the urine, and was still obtainable a half hour later. After thus proving the harmlessness of the remedy in large doses,...
