Yet mind will question, though it be but fond, For human thought that looks within, finds scenes So strange, yet unresolved, it stands at gaze, Knowing not itself; and He who has so Moulded man lies close pressed among its deepest Mysteries. Invisible Power, what art thou, That thus with thy shadow veilst all, making In thine own obscurity all marvel Greater Down, down, thou questioner. Yet we Are Gods, with a Gods powers, then why not Give a Gods knowledge, that we may turn the Edge of all misgiving, and fixed be Firm and free Unpremeditated our Thoughts oft fly across the brain, and oft, as Hounds hunt a forest, are by obstacles Turned, till far at fault, they lose the scent of Every purpose, for our minds do not aye Echo their desires, but like stones fall back From the vault of...
