The Populace are gathered in the courtyard; the Boyars, with Prince Shouisky at their head, enter and pass into the Convent, and presently a Police Official appears and spurs on the people to a demonstration. The populace, addressing themselves to the Tzar, who has retired to the seclusion of the Convent, beseech him to listen to their prayers and once more assume the sceptre of Russia. Tchelkalov, Secretary of the Duma, appears from the Convent and informs the crowd that the Tzar remains inflexible to the appeals of his subjects. A number of Pilgrims enter, also bent upon a similar errand to the Tzar. They distribute icons among the people and all join in an anthem, as the curtain descends. The second scene shows a cell in the Convent of Miracles. Pimenn is writing his chronicles by the light of a lamp; while another Monk, Gregory, lies asleep. From the interior come at intervals the chants of other Monks at prayer. Gregory awakes from a horrible dream which he relates to Pimenn who counsels him to pray more, so that such corrupting visions may not have dominion over his youthful mind. He assures him that the splendors of the world are not worth the price one pays for them and reminds him that even a Tzar had retired to the seclusion of a monastery, good man though he had been. As the bell rings for matins, Pimenn leaves his companion, who, alone, bemoans the fate of the murdered Tzarevitch and the misdeeds of the Tzar, whose acts...
