Extracto: . . . of the Emperor or his brother, Cornelius Cyrenius. Upon what charge do you expect to obtain such a warrant asked Caiaphas. He stirreth the people! Bah! angrily put in Caiaphas. Pilate and the judges would not consider that charge sufficient ground for a trial by the higher tribunal. Perhaps not; but once we get the warrant we may force our claims and build up a case that will unnerve the most powerful dictator or a Monarch. Once we lay our hands upon our prey we will not let go. We will take Him back and forth from court to court until the density of confusion will exhaust every heart and mind, and to rid themselves of suspense King and priest, judge and pauper will join in the cry--Crucify Him! It cant be done! thundered Caiaphas. It is too ridiculous; should such a judicial murder occur the event would go down in history, reflecting upon the people of our day forever. Think you so answered Sirach coolly. But we will be able to attend to that matter with the legions of scribes at our command. Have we not heretofore fixed history and records to serve our ends Are not we the ones who make history The deed must serve our purpose. Either way history will read aright to our kind, and wherever contradictory we have recourse to interpretation, as in law we have recourse to decisions. Pilate and the counsel of judges will not permit judicial murder, broke in...
