Not illustrated. 1910 Excerpt: . . . 1886, which characterizes this first period most happily, at the same time announcing his future evolution towards a more expressive, a more poetic, not to say a more mystic ideal. Afterwards Dagnan-Bouveret painted Breton subjects, which brought him great success and even a first medal with his Pardon in 1889. These pictures mark his new evolution in the poetic sense and also towards an ever lighter and subtler technique. The Lords Supper, which decorates the back wall of the musicroom of the Countess of Beam, is his principal work in the religious and mystic genre. Of late years he has especially devoted himself to the portrait, and has painted, with distinction and style, a certain number of ladies from the Parisian aristocracy. Dagnan-Bouveret has been a member of the Institut since 1900, and an officer of the Legion of Honour since 1892. Dagnan-bouveret. --The Pain Benit (The Luxembourg) At the same moment (for they are exact contemporaries) appeared Henri Gervex, who was born in Paris on the 10th of December, 1852. Having Brisset, Fromentin, and Cabanel for his masters, he came in contact with Bastien-Lepage, and adopted, with the rather combative spirit of independence which marks his first pictures, the principles of light painting and of the nude in the open air. He exhibited for the first time in 1873. In 1876 he began a series of subjects, which first caused some surprise, but were soon imitated. Gervex painted portraits and especially portraits in groups, animated...
